Maintenance Dishwashers, Part II

Last month's dishwasher article sparked many comments. I did dishwasher research (seriously) – here's what Consumer Reports, Good Housekeeping and the New York Times have to say:

In July, manufacturers were required to eliminate phosphates from dishwasher detergent, resulting in a spike in consumer complaints about dishwashers, since dishes look less clean. Phosphates make water wetter, allowing water to sheet off dishes and preventing debris from settling back on dishes and glassware. Suggestions include:

- Clean out filters and remove debris from under the wash arm. With the dishwasher empty, fill a dishwasher safe bowl with vinegar, place it on the top rack and run the dishwasher through a complete hot water cycle
- Loading matters – load plates so that dirty side faces center. Mix types of silverware in the divided basket so that forks and spoons don't nest together. Put some right side up and some upside down to prevent "spooning" (yes, that really is the technical term). Cups and glasses go in between the tines, not on top. If the tip of the tine contacts the glass or cup, it will leave a spot
